I can't seem to recall the name but it was about a woman who took over her husband's business. When Margaret Fisher's friends were killed in a tragic accident, she suddenly found herself co-guardian of the couple's six-year-old son. Front desk managers- we had one that was lovely and helpful and one that was a totally different - unhelpful and inconsiderate- perhaps families with children are not the clients they want at the property but the way our booking was handled was beyond unreasonable- man who wanted to show that he is in charge and showed that he is a total incompetent at consumer relations. Maybe even more excited than about trade. The article concludes with practical suggestions for how we can embrace behavioural genetics as our methods struggle to match the divine complexity of human existence.
